Dear Human Resource Director,

I am currently a Junior undergraduate at Indiana University, Bloomington double majoring in Computer Science and Political Science. While browsing through the Hacker News' "Who is Hiring (November 2016)" thread, Locus Energy's post caught my eye. As a double major in a STEM and a Social Science field, I am always looking for internships and opportunities that will help me improve my technical abilities while contributing to a social cause. Especially one as pressing and interesting as solar energy.

Allow me to highlight the qualifications and contributions I can bring to Locus Energy:

- A summer internship at a startup in Tel Aviv where I honed my Python abilities by writing supervising software for beta hardware as well as a live video streaming network.
- I am currently a part-time software developer for a local Bloomington, Indiana startup where I help design custom web applications which has helped me develop my JavaScript and web development skills.
- I restarted and acted as Co-Director for E-Force, an environmental and sustainability club at Indiana University. As Co-Director I helped plan advocacy programs that included organizing speakers and documentary screenings relating to climate change and alternative energy.
- Excellent interpersonal and communication skills, the ability to work both independently and as part of a team, and a deep interest in learning and improving both my programming skills and my knowledge of alternative energy.

An internship with Locus Energy seems perfectly inline with my educational and professional goals. I believe that my qualifications and prior-experience will allow me to make valuable contributions to Locus Energy. I would welcome a personal interview to explore how my experience, education, and ambitions intersect with Locus Energy's goals.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,
